Wechat app download for android free

If you just unpacked a new smartphone or are thinking of using that holiday money envelope to run out and buy it, and you're eager to fill it in new ways to distract yourself, then read on. Among all the next year's end-of-year retrospectives, future predictions, and service-y listicles pumped out by every media on the planet at this time of year, this story may be for you. There are millions of programs. Apple iOS and Google Android offer more than 2 million apps in their respective download stores. Each app store has its own best charts and recommendations for common suspects – Facebook, Netflix, Spotify, Snapchat, YouTube and other well-known social networks, media services, transportation tools and games. But there are many other great programs out there, from obscure to hard-spoken, whose names may not be on the tip of the tongue when firing a new gadget. Last year, we published a list of seven lesser-known but very valuable programs. We suggested (and still highly recommend) Dark Sky for air, Stitcher podcasts, Giphy Cam for fun animation, and afterlight for photo editing. The traffic that followed was full of bonkers, suggesting that guides like this are exactly the type of things you're looking for right now. So here's another one. This time we've rounded up eight more extremely useful, entertaining, or otherwise download-worthy apps we've encountered this year. 1 Second Everyday (iOS and Android)In the era of smartphones, almost every moment of our lives has been carefully documented, but most of the images we discreetly share in the past, followed by new posts on Instagram or Facebook. Or in snapchat's case they just disappear forever. 1 Second daily approach things differently. The app is designed to do exactly what its name shows: capture one second of a video every day or as many days as you remember you're using it. The end result is a rapid burst of fire in short moments that, as they add, offer a high-level but insightful glimpse into what your daily life looks like. It may be light in context, but the series of clips tells a story that is otherwise difficult to capture in carefully filtered and deliberately curated photos and videos posted elsewhere one by one, and then immediately forgotten. With 1 Second Everyday, you can export a composite video and share it on your chosen social networks or just keep it to yourself as a personal video blog. If nothing else, it's a useful internal reminder that in some years there are more than major stages of life, holiday photos, and cringeworthy news headlines that may come lightest to mind. Life really consists of many types of moments; it's just a question that we capture and remember. Download 1 Second Daily here. Hopper (iOS and once I wanted to flee from the East Coast in the heat of California, I called Hopper to help me figure out the best time to fly. Within minutes my flight was booked. Although there are many flight tracking and travel programs there, few offer a combination of simplicity and data-driven forecasting mastery. The color-coded layout of the search results calendar gives you a clear, first-looking view of what days, weeks, and months are the cheapest time to fly. If a particular flight statistically can get cheaper (or more expensive) in the future, Hopper will tell you, setting out the odds of various possible price fluctuations and when they may happen. You can also track searches and choose to receive notifications when suggestions appear or when Hopper finds another locale to which you may be interested to travel, depending on previous searches. For example, perhaps your search for a flight to Miami has yielded more expensive results, but if an insane deal flight to Ft. Lauderdale or Orlando turns out, you'll get a push notification right away. So whether you're planning business trips after specific dates, or just trying to scratch that wanderlust itch on a whim, Hopper is one of the easiest ways to plot an ideal possible trip. Download Hopper here. The 60db (iOS only)podcasting renaissance is still barreling forward, but it has a long way to go: Only 20% of Americans say they listened to the podcast. 60db hopes that digital audio consumption feels more like radio (a century-old medium that is still going strong), but also injecting it with a more personalized, digestible taste of modern digital media services. The result, especially built by veterans of NPR and Netflix, is something that feels like radio, but with some algorithmic smart and new content initiatives that have changed the way we now define and consume TV. 60db allows you to subscribe to most standard, publicly available podcasts you can think of, but its focus is on shorter-form audio stories that cater to more specific interests than a general interest podcast can. These fast hits, often produced by 60db employees along with established media brands, offer a 10-minute or less sound narrative of an ever-expanding range of topics. And as we came to expect from services like Pandora and Netflix, 60db learns how you listen, the more you use it, the smarter it gets. More and more attention-paying podcasts and radio programmes such as NPR One, Stitcher and RadioPublic (another new offer for public radio vets), but 60db is out of its way to be particularly light and immersive. Download 60db here. Headspace (iOS and Android) Scientific case for attentive meditation is not only well known. And amid our growing dependence on apps and screens and the anxiety of an endlessly chaotic news cycle, you can argue that our brains can now use rest than ever. Many experts are in favour of having the screen time as low as possible, but for those moments when you can't yourself from your phone, you can also have digital tools to help restore your holiness. Headspace is popular. The app uses a cute design, programmable reminders and a soothing accent from a British guy named Andy to entice you away from pointless digital distractions and into a more focused, calmer state. Headspace is a (fair warning) paid subscription service that offers guided, audio meditation exercises in various circumstances, but it offers enough free sessions to give you a proper feel of how the service works and whether it's worth paying $13 per month (or $8 if you're willing to pay a lump sum for full-year access). Of course, there are some meditation-oriented programs such as Meditation Studio and Satva. If you happen to have an Apple Watch, it's worth checking out the Apple app Breathe. Download Headspace here. (iOS and Android) Even if you are not a great player, you may find it difficult to stop playing this one. PinOut is an '80s-themed retro style pinball game for iOS and Android. In fact, the more sensitive to nostalgia of the 1980's (or otherwise appreciated you may be neon design and synth-heavy music), the longer you'll be glued to it. His retro-electronic soundtrack sounds like he was ripped straight from the introduction to Netflix's mega hit Stranger Things and his pulsating, neon-laced game layout feels like tron, exploding in pinball form. Download PinOut here. Quartz (iOS and Android)There are easily hundreds of different ways to read news on your phone – whether it be from your friends on Twitter and Facebook, or through more news-specific apps, from hubs such as Google News, Clipboard, Feedly and Reddit, to publishers such as BuzzFeed, the New York Times or the BBC. However, almost never has these programmes come out of the traditional, headline-based paradigm of using news. Quartz, a business-oriented news media brand launched by The Atlantic four years ago, had a different idea. The program, which it launched in early 2016, overshadowed a familiar news format in favor of the conversation interface. Instead of reading the news, you're talking to them. Programs pre-formed, often emoji-loaded answers (tell me more or more?) allow you to use a name-your-adventure style to navigate the latest and most important events in the world. In clickbait headlines and uncertainty on which news articles are even in real age, what can be more refreshing than talking about the news with someone who feels like a very well-informed friend, even if it's just soulless bot? Download Quartz here. Nuzzle (iOS and Android)If you want to watch our strange new reality but are not in the mood to chat with the newsbot, Nuzzle is another virtual kiosk with a modern spin. The Social News app displays the articles that your Twitter friends currently share the most (by default in the last hour, but you can 24 hours or travel on time to previous days). What Nuzzlel may be missing (Flipboard has offered Twitter-driven news since 2010) it consists of intelligent design and flexibility. The app allows you to exit the bubble behind your Twitter and see the news shared by friends of friends and browse even more broadly on your Discover tab. It also helpfully offers news that you may have missed. Nuzzlel certainly serves news addicts first, but that doesn't mean he doesn't serve people prone to more casual headline scanning. In fact, it's not even just Twitter users anymore. Last year, the news app redesigned its service to open it to everyone. In this way, we can observe civilization by unraveling in the seams as we do everything else: staring silently at our phones together. Download Nuzzle here. (iOS and Android) Listening to music is one of the most obvious and common uses of our phones, so apps like Pandora and Spotify always get high ranking in app stores. But if you're a bona fide, crate-digging music snob, chances are you're missing out on some of the latest and best music that is created. This is because before novice artists sign a label or pay to self-distribute their music to major subscription services, they first take matters into their own hands on services such as Bandcamp and SoundCloud. And more than most music services, Bandcamp can legitimately make a rare statement: It actually helps independent and smaller label artists get paid. The main focus of the service is on selling physical albums, downloads, and other items such as T-shirts. But while it's not a streaming service in the traditional sense, Bandcamp allows you to listen to music, track artists and increasingly discover new music. Just watching the app's best-selling and genre-specific tabs is guaranteed to unearth something new and excellent. Take a full look at SoundCloud and subscribe to the streaming service – Apple Music has amazing playlists, and Spotify data-driven music discovery features are innovative and addictive. However, don't think for a minute that your music library collection will be finished until you download the Bandcamp program. It.
